I agree with Craig's concerns and suggested responses. We don't want a forest of planted poles to take the place of rooted trees in the riparian buffer and flood plain. It sounds like putting wires underground could also result in tree removal, but how much damage is proposed for this won't be known until a proposal for such work is presented. And how wide the right of way that has to be maintained as tree-less for the life of the installation is also of concern.
